The music by the younger boys was as good as could have been expected from pupils but a short time under instruction. That rendered by the orchestra, the first and second classes and the band was remarkably good and rather above the average for such young ama eurs. Unfortunately too much time was consumed in tuning and preparing, which proved somewhat tedious. Taken on the whole, the performances, whether on the violin, flute, piano or bass instruments, were surprisingly good, and indicate great taste and talent on the
